

Vira Halim is the Football Communications Coordinator at the Miami Dolphins. Prior to the Miami Dolphins, she was a brand ambassador for Kendra Scott. Halim has a diverse portfolio of experience, but she specializes in the sports industry. She has been a part of the Super Bowl LIV PR staff, an SEC Baseball Tournament Media Assistant, and a Communications Intern for the Atlanta Falcons.

Moreover, Halim attended the University of Georgia and earned a B.A. in Journalism with a Spanish minor and a sports media certificate. There she took numerous photojournalism classes where she learned the importance of factual information. She gives credit to Mark Johnson and Vicki Michaelis who taught her the basics of communications work and supported her goals. While attending UGA she interned in the athletic office as a press intern, where she fell in love with storytelling through a team perspective.

While completing multiple internships through national sporting teams and publications, she built connections and landed her position with the Miami Dolphins. Now as the Football Communications Coordinator, she works with national reporters, writers, and directors to produce sports media. She also works closely with the football players to ensure their interest and community initiatives are reflected through the Miami Dolphins' media outlets. One of her major goals within her field is to help others become more effective with their platforms while protecting the team brand. She currently loves the team culture and is honored to represent women in sports who are celebrated for their hard work.
